In 2010, AutoCAD Serial Key 2010 had a complete rewrite of the codebase with a new and rewritten programming language, AutoLISP. History AutoCAD is a product of Autodesk, which was originally AutoCAD Incorporated, based in San Rafael, California. The original AutoCAD development group was formed by three engineers from AT&T. AutoCAD was originally written by John Walker. Since that time, it has been used in creating and designing complex architectural plans. However, it does have limitations, as it is limited to creating very simple two-dimensional drawings and not in higher dimensions. Due to this fact, along with the addition of geographic information system (GIS) capabilities, AutoCAD has evolved into a general-purpose design tool. AutoCAD came to be developed using LISP (a dialect of Scheme), which was originally written by John Maloney at MIT Lincoln Labs, as a part of the CAD project. It was later ported to Mac OS and the Macintosh platform by individuals, and then ported to Windows. It has always been free of charge, and is available to the public. AutoCAD has been awarded "BEST IN CLASS" of "Windows Standard" by Windows Magazine since 1996. In 1999, the Technical Achievement Awards voted it the top Windows application by the readers of MSDN Magazine. In 2000, it was awarded "PRO" status by the Professional Graphics Standards Group (PGS). AutoCAD has also been awarded the same status by PGS for the past two years. In December 2001, AutoCAD received the Windows Entertainment Industry Award, and was awarded PC Magazine's Editor's Choice Award for "Best Engineering Software". In 2002, AutoCAD was recognized by Macworld as "Software of the Year". AutoCAD also won an Editor's Choice award for Best Graphics Software in PC Magazine's June 2002 issue. It has been a finalist in the Professional Productivity Software category at the Software & Information Industry Association (SIIA) since 2002. In 2009, Autodesk reported that AutoCAD revenue was up by $2 million from 2008, and that it had over five million licensed users. Acquisition On August 8, 2009, Autodesk announced its intent to acquire a majority stake in Corel (formerly CorelDRAW), a Canadian company founded in 1988 to provide a more comprehensive replacement for the AutoCAD program. The deal valued Corel at $495 ca3bfb1094
